The copyright law of the United States (Title 17, United States Code) governs the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted materials including foreign works under certain conditions. In addition, the United States extends protection to foreign works by means of various international conventions, bilateral agreements, and proclamations.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

The Columbia University Libraries reserve the right to refuse to accept a copying order if, in its judgement, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copyright law.

Appendix—Limitations of Comparisons..... 133

INTRODUCTION

In the winter of 1934-1935 the public unemployment relief rolls reached a peak of nearly 5½ million cases, including over 20½ million persons.[1] The census on which the statistics presented in this volume are based was taken in March 1935, a month well on the crest of this peak. This census included 4,158,477[2] households containing 1 or more workers[3] who received relief under the general relief program jointly undertaken by the States and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. The workers 16 through 64 years of age in those cases total 6,152,639, approximately one-eighth of the number of gainful workers of the same age class reported by the Fifteenth Census of the United States in April 1930.

These statistics were collected as an aid to the administration of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. It was the purpose of this act to "provide relief, work relief, and to increase employment by providing for useful projects." To fulfill these requirements, it was necessary to ascertain the occupational characteristics of the relief labor supply. Some information about the usual occupations of the workers on relief had already been obtained through sample studies[4] in connection with the administration of the work relief program of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. However, the magnitude of the new Works Program, and the established policy of adapting Works Program projects so far as possible to the usual occupations of unemployed workers on the relief rolls, made it necessary to obtain occupational statistics on a State and county basis.

AREA INCLUDED

The statistics in this volume relate to the continental United States. Data are presented for the United States and for each State.

PERSONS INCLUDED

Only persons 16 through 64 years of age, inclusive, working or seeking work, who were members of households which received relief under the general relief program jointly undertaken by the States and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, were enumerated for this census.

[1] Despite the fact that available information points to increases in employment from March 1933 to the winter of 1934-1935, the public unemployment relief rolls, taking account of seasonal factors, show an increase for this period. This is attributable partly to the fact that there is a considerable lag between loss of employment and registration for public unemployment relief. The number of unemployed who are forced to apply for public aid increases with the duration of unemployment and the exhaustion of resources.

[2] The total number of cases which received public unemployment relief under the general relief program of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration in March 1935 was 5,171,690. This number includes approximately 1,000,000 cases that did not contain employable workers.

[3] See definition of workers below in section "Definition of Terms."

[4] Notably the Urban Workers on Relief, Part I—The Occupational Characteristics of Workers on Relief in Urban Areas, May 1934 and Part II—The Occupational Characteristics of Workers on Relief in 79 Cities, Division of Social Research, Works Progress Administration.

This included workers in the specified age group in all resident households, consisting of families, single persons, or local homeless persons who received aid through direct relief or through the Federal Emergency Relief Administration work program.

It should be noted that workers of households which participated only in the following special programs are excluded from this tabulation: (1) Transient; (2) Emergency Education; (3) College Student Aid; (4) Rural Rehabilitation; (5) Drought Relief; and (6) Surplus Commodities.

PERIOD

This census included workers of relief households which received aid during the calendar month of March 1935. In a few areas, because of administrative exigencies, the census covered a period other than March 1935. The exceptions and the periods covered are: New York, May 1935; New Jersey, April 1935; Illinois, February 1935; Philadelphia County, Pennsylvania, May 1935; Los Angeles County, California, May 1935. The statistics for these units, with the exception of Illinois and New York City, have been adjusted to March 1935 by applying to the data reported the ratio of their total relief loads in March 1935 to their total relief loads during the month in which the census was actually taken. The data for the State of Illinois and for New York City have not been adjusted because in each instance the relief load for the month of the census differed by less than 1 percent from that of March. All of these adjustments are relatively minor because of the proximity of the actual census dates for those areas to March 1935.

COLLECTION OF MATERIALS

The materials in this volume are based on the occupational and personal history information contained in the Occupational Classification Record (FERA Form 144), a family record card designed for Works Program placement purposes. A file of Occupational Classification Records, containing cards for all relief households with workers, was prepared by each county office (or branch thereof) of the Emergency Relief Administration. To insure the inclusion of the units desired, this file was matched with an index of all households which received relief during the calendar month of March 1935.[5] The personal history information on the Occupational Classification Record was obtained through personal interview by case workers of the Social Service Division, and the information relating to the occupation and industry of workers was collected through personal interview by personnel officers of the Work Division. In some instances local administrative requirements made it necessary to obtain the personal and occupational data from the case records of the Social Service Division or from the placement records of the local Work Division. Interviews were conducted in accordance with standard instructions—that is, all terms were uniformly defined in the manner indicated below. (See Definition of Terms.) All persons who interviewed workers in order to ascertain their usual occupations and industries were instructed in the technique of procuring information and in the making of satisfactory entries.

The information desired for tabulation was transcribed in each county office from the Occupational Classification Record to a standardized transcription sheet. The transcription sheets were forwarded to centrally located tabulating offices for editing, coding, and mechanical tabulation.

DEFINITION OF TERMS

Worker—A "worker", as used in this volume, is any person, male or female, 16 through 64 years of age, inclusive, who, at the time of this census, was a member of a relief household and who was working or seeking work, except an adult male or female needed at home to care for dependents under 16 years of age. Local Social Service Divisions of the Emergency Relief Administration were instructed to interpret this definition on the basis of the situation in each family and to take into consideration such factors as whether the adult in question had been in the habit of working while providing for the care of children by a relative or outside the home.

Usual Occupation—The occupational returns reported in this volume are based on the worker's "usual occupation." Usual occupation was defined as that occupation at which the person worked longest during the 10 years preceding this census. If the person worked approximately the same length of time at two or more occupations, the one at which he worked last was entered. An occupation was entered for every person who had worked any length of time, however short, during the preceding 10 years. Occupations were entered also for persons whose sole work experience had been obtained on work relief projects or some other emergency employment type of work such as that provided by the Civil Works Administration or the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The Occupational Classification Record and the transcription sheet used in tabulation contained provision, also, for the entry of the usual industry of the worker. Usual industry was defined as that industry in which the person worked longest at his usual occupation. The industry return helped to identify and to classify the occupation.

Inexperienced Workers—Persons seeking work who performed no gainful work of any kind during the 10 years preceding this census are reported as "inexperienced." Housewives and housekeepers working in their own homes and girls performing household tasks in their own homes, but who were seeking work, are also classified as "inexperienced" persons, unless they worked outside their homes in the preceding 10-year period. In the latter case their usual occupation, as defined above, is reported. Young persons seeking their first jobs and older persons who may have returned to the labor market after a period of retirement, including the 10 years preceding the census, are also returned in the "inexperienced" category.

Economic Head of Relief Family—Data for the United States are presented separately for all workers and for the economic heads of relief families.

The Social Service Division of the Emergency Relief Administration was asked to indicate which worker in the family should be given preference in employment on the Works Program. This decision as to "priority ranking" for work was based on the case worker's judgment of the qualifications and fitness for work of the individual workers in the household, the attitude of the household members as to which one should be employed, and the occupational skill which should be developed or preserved. The person so designated to be given preference in employment is regarded in this volume as the economic head of the relief family.

Relief Family—The relief family or household is the unit for the administration of public unemployment relief. It may consist of a single person or a group of persons, who may or may not be related.

Age—The age classification in this volume is based on the age of the worker at his birthday nearest to March 1935. In some areas age was recorded on the basis of the nearest birthday to the time of filling the record card. Since these records were filled in the period from November 1934 to April 1935, there is some lack of uniformity in the reporting of age in this census.

Color—Statistics are presented for all workers, and for workers of the white and Negro races, respectively. The statistics for all workers include data for persons of races other than the white or the Negro and for persons of unknown color or race. Statistics for workers of races other than white and Negro have not been separately tabulated.

Urban and Rural Place of Residence—The statistics for the United States are presented by urban and rural place of residence of the workers on relief. The definitions of urban and rural adopted were those used by the United States Bureau of the Census in the Census of 1930. "Urban" places of residence include all cities and incorporated places with a population of 2,500 or more persons in 1930. "Rural" places of residence include open country areas, and town and unincorporated places with a population of fewer than 2,500 persons in 1930. In the New England States, and in some other States, towns (townships) are classified as urban if they have a population of 2,500 or more and certain urban characteristics. The Bureau of the Census practice was followed in these instances.

AREAS SAMPLED

Because of administrative requirements at the time of enumeration, the data reported for New York City, and for Cook County, Illinois, including the city of Chicago, are not based on a complete count of the Occupational Classification Records. The data for New York City are based on a 10-percent sample, selected at random, of relief households with workers; the data for Cook County, Illinois, including the city of Chicago, are based on a 20-percent sample, similarly selected, of relief households with workers. In choosing the sample, an index was prepared for all households which received relief during the month studied. Households were selected at random from this index in accordance with the sampling ratio. In New York City every tenth household in the index was chosen, and in Cook County, Illinois, including the city of Chicago, every fifth household. The data thus obtained were multiplied by the sampling ratio in each case, before they were included in the tables for the respective States.

OCCUPATIONAL CLASSIFICATION

The Occupational Classification used in the material reported here differs from the classification in the General Report on Occupations of the Fifteenth Census of the United States. A table indicating the relationship between the two classifications is available in the Labor Inventory Section of the Division of Social Research of the Works Progress Administration. The basic code used in classifying the occupations reported in this volume was prepared by Dr. Gladys L. Palmer and was published by the Works Progress Administration in Circular No. 2, Occupational Classification and Code, July 1935. A detailed list of occupational designations, classified in accordance with this code, is available in Circular No. 2A, Index of Occupations (Alphabetical Arrangement), published by the Works Progress Administration, September 1935.

The Occupational Classification was designed to secure uniformity throughout the country in the classification of workers eligible to be employed on projects under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. It is, therefore, a special purpose classification. Greater detail is offered for the identification of occupations in the building and construction industries and other types of work which are important for placement purposes in the Works Program. Less detail is available for manufacturing and other industries, although many of the standardized mechanical occupations are specifically identified. The items in this Occupational Classification are not intended to offer a complete list of specific occupations. With certain exceptions, as in the building and construction industries, they are categories for groups of closely allied occupations.

LIMITATIONS OF COMPARISONS

A statement is presented in the appendix indicating the limitations of comparisons of the occupational statistics for workers on relief in March 1935 with the statistics for gainful workers in 1930 as reported in the Fifteenth Census of the United States.

FURTHER STATISTICS AVAILABLE

In addition to the statistics presented in this preliminary volume, the following data based on the census of workers on relief in March 1935 are also available in the Division of Social Research of the Works Progress Administration: (1) detailed statistics for each State of the type presented for the United States in this volume; (2) similar statistics in less detail for all cities in the United States with a population of 100,000 or more persons in 1930; (3) similar statistics in condensed form for each county in the United States.

In order to provide more current data on the occupational characteristics of workers on relief another census was taken on January 15, 1936, which enumerated the usual occupations of workers and economic heads of families eligible for Works Program employment on that date. Preliminary summary data, based on this later census, are now being prepared for publication. A statement will be presented in this later volume indicating the limitations of comparisons of the data for January 15, 1936, with those for March 1935.

Qualifications of Summary Statistics for the United States

The statistics for the United States are based on a complete census of workers and economic heads of families on relief in all States and the District of Columbia, except that data for New York City and for Cook County, Illinois (including Chicago) are based on a 10 per cent and a 20 per cent random sample, respectively, of relief households with workers.

In compiling the summary statistics for the United States, the data for New York State (excluding New York City); Los Angeles County, California; and Philadelphia County, Pennsylvania, have been adjusted from May 1935 to March 1935 on the basis of the relief case loads (including cases without workers) for the two dates. Data for New Jersey have been adjusted from April 1935 to March 1935 on the same basis. Data for Illinois are for February 1935 and the data for New York City are for May 1935. The statistics for these two areas have not been adjusted because in each instance the relief case load for the month of the census differed from the relief case load for March 1935 by less than one per cent.

Data for Missouri include estimates of workers who, because of the transitional character of the Emergency Relief Administration's files in St. Louis, were not included in the original field report for that city. Data for Delaware are for New Castle County only, the only one of the three counties in the State which participated in the general relief program of the Federal Relief Administration in March 1935.

[a]Includes workers 16 through 64 years of age, based upon a complete census of the State, except that data for Cook County are based upon a 20% random sample in the county of relief households with workers.
[b]The statistics presented are for February 1935. The data for Illinois have not been adjusted to March 1935 because the difference between the relief case loads for the two months (including cases without workers) was less than one per cent.
[c]Includes white, Negro, other, and unknown color or race.
[d]Not elsewhere classified.

[1]Includes workers 16 through 64 years of age, based on a complete census of the State except that data for New York City are based on a 10 per cent random sample of relief households with workers.

[2]Data for the State (excluding New York City) have been adjusted from May 1935 to March 1935 by applying the ratio of the March relief case load (including cases without workers) to that of May. The data for New York City have not been adjusted because the difference between the relief case loads for the two periods was less than one per cent.

[3]Includes white, Negro, other, and unknown color or race.

[4]Not elsewhere classified.

APPENDIX

Limitations of Comparisons

LIMITATIONS OF COMPARISONS

The occupational statistics for workers on relief in March 1935 presented in this volume cannot be compared directly with the statistics for gainful workers in 1930 reported in the Fifteenth Census of the United States. There are at least four important factors which affect any such comparisons.

In the first place, there is a considerable time interval between the two sets of data. The statistics of the Fifteenth Census of the United States are reported as of April 1, 1930, while those for workers receiving relief were obtained as of March 1935. Although it would be desirable to have statistics for relief and non-relief workers for the same period, such data are not available.

Second, any comparisons with the 1930 statistics, even though made by class of occupation, are limited by the fact that the Works Progress Administration Classification and Code differs from the occupational classification employed in the Fifteenth Census of the United States. As has been indicated in the introduction in the discussion of Occupational Classification, a table showing the relationship between the two classifications is available in the Labor Inventory Section of the Division of Social Research of the Works Progress Administration.

Third, the populations included are not strictly similar. The enumeration of gainful workers in the Census of 1930 included persons with previous work experience 10 years of age or over. The occupational census of workers on relief in March 1935 presents data for workers 16 through 64 years of age, including inexperienced persons as well as workers with previous work experience. Moreover, among the experienced workers are included some whose only work experience had been provided by the work projects of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration and other Federal agencies. To the extent that these Federal work projects created new workers in specific occupational fields, such occupations are partly overrepresented among relief workers when comparisons are made with the 1930 Census data.

Fourth, administrative practices and administrative policies naturally affect these data. The differences in practices and policies between localities in provision for the administration of public unemployment and categorical relief may account for many of the disparities in the comparisons of the data for a given State with comparable statistics for gainful workers in 1930. In the State of Delaware, the most outstanding example, only one of its three counties participated in March 1935 in the general relief program jointly undertaken by the State and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.
